

Massachusetts High Demand Scholarship Program (MHDSP)

The Massachusetts High Demand Scholarship Program (MHDSP) was created by the Massachusetts Legislature to support economic growth and development. Based on the most current data from the Executive Office of Workforce Development, this new scholarship program will support students pursuing programs of study in specific professions, and who plan to work in those areas upon graduation. For the first cycle of awards, high demand disciplines designated for scholarship eligibility at the bachelor's degree will include those in:

- Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM)
- Nursing and other health professions disciplines such as radiology, Occupational Therapy, medical and clinical laboratory technology
- Elementary and Secondary Education (except Special Education)
- Business, specifically Finance and Accounting
- Certificate programs in computer science

The high demand fields are current estimates of the Department of Labor and Workforce Development that are tied to long term projections on jobs and occupations, based on the Occupational Employment and Wage Statistics (OES) program, from 2010 to 2020. These disciplines reflect a certain expected growth in occupations and further project the number of likely replacements, as the Massachusetts workforce continues to age.

To be eligible for the Massachusetts High Demand Scholarship, an applicant must meet specific program guidelines (see attached) and complete the following:

- the online scholarship application,
